Session:

Departmental Management and Leadership Workshop. Creating Family-friendly Policies in the Department: Drawing on Empirical Research to Make Effective Changes

Sponsor:

Departmental Workshop

Schedule Information:

Scheduled Time: Fri, Aug 17 - 10:30am - 12:10pm

Title Displayed in Event Calendar: Departmental Management and Leadership Workshop.
Creating Family-friendly Policies in the Department: Drawing on Empirical Research to Make Effective Changes

Session Participants:

Session Organizer: Catherine Richards Solomon (Quinnipiac University)

Leader: Catherine Richards Solomon (Quinnipiac University)

Co-Leader: Joya Misra (University of Massachusetts)

Co-Leader: Kris De Welde (Florida Gulf Coast University)

Co-Leader: Marjukka Ollilainen (Weber State University)

Abstract:

Many departments seek to make changes in how they address faculty members' family responsibilities, especially given the increasing number of women faculty who have children. This session will address these concerns by focusing on the role of family-friendly policies in helping departments and universities support faculty. Session co-leaders will briefly present their research and experience implementing these policies. Workshop attendees will reflect on a series of relevant questions developed by the co-leaders and will leave the workshop with a set of goals and a preliminary plan for implementing family-friendly policies in their departments and/or universities.

Discussant: Harry Brighouse (University of Wisconsin)

Abstract:

In this essay, we draw on feminist welfare state scholarship to outline an institutional arrangement that would support an earner–carer society — that is, a social arrangement in which women and men engage symmetrically in paid work and unpaid caregiving and where young children have ample time with their parents. We present a blueprint for work–family reconciliation policies in three areas — paid family-leave provisions, working-time regulations, and early childhood education and care — and we identify key policy design principles. We describe and assess these work–family reconciliation policies as they operate in six European countries widely considered to be policy exemplars: Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, and France. We close with an analysis of potential barriers to achievability.

Panelist: Heidi I. Hartmann (Institute for Women's Policy Research)

Panelist: Joan C. Williams (University of California and Hastings College of Law)

Panelist: Shelley J. Correll (Stanford University)

Abstract:

As sociologists debate whether the gender revolution in the labor force and other institutional sectors is "uneven and stalled" (England 2010), this session steps back and addresses a larger question -- "where do we think that revolution is taking us as it applies to the workplace?" Three decades of scholarship of gender and work is mostly backwards looking, focusing mainly on how the gender system creates workplace disparities. In this session, distinguished gender scholars take a forward look, sharing their visions of where the gender revolution is to take us in creating a workplace free of gender bias.

Session Organizer: Heidi I. Hartmann (Institute for Women's Policy Research)

Presider: Heidi I. Hartmann (Institute for Women's Policy Research)

Panelist: Leonilla Vega (Direct Care Alliance)

Panelist: Ai-jen Poo (Domestic Workers Alliance)

Abstract:

This session will discuss various organizing efforts in the direct care labor market which are working to bring together direct care workers, consumers, and others who have a stake in seeing improvement in the quality of care provided, the quality of working conditions for direct care workers, and recognition of the importance of this work by broader society. Direct care work for children, older people and people with disabilities will all be considered, though the focus will be on elder care. The success of these organizing efforts and their ability to move us towards a more utopian future with greater justice for both who provide care and those who receive it will be discussed.
